

Financial Institutions

Sheridan has a long history of providing new construction to the banking industry in Maine. We know that whether we are building a small branch or a flagship facility, each has its own objectives and individual requirements that best serve the needs of its customers. In collaboration with architects, designers and mechanical subcontractors we form a team that brings years of collective experience into focus for our clients. This focus provides the client with a facility that is highly functional with an outward aesthetic that projects its mission to the community.

We provide our clients with a full service approach to building. From the first conceptual drawings to the ribbon cutting, we watch the details and the dollars to stay on time and on budget. Our clients stay involved and informed without sacrificing valuable time from their banking priorities. The chain of communication forged during the planning stages continues throughout the life of the project ensuring that decisions and changes are made in a timely fashion without adversely effecting the schedule. Continuous on-site supervision and construction management ensures that all phases of the project are being carried out at the optimum level and with the highest attention for quality.

Maine financial organizations maintain very close ties to the communities they serve. Whenever possible, Sheridan encourages the inclusion of local suppliers and subcontractors in the construction process, thereby strengthening the bank's interest in the local economy. This is especially important in rural areas where bank managers and staff are often on a first name basis with their customers. In this way it would not be uncommon for a branch manager to look up and see the same people who built her building waiting in the teller's queue.

In many respects the banking industry and Sheridan have very similar goals. We both have a vested interest in the success of Maine businesses and the people they employ. Our conscientious service to them ensures our own continued success and prosperity. At Sheridan, we know that delivering a quality product at an affordable cost is something that will never go out of style and will continue to pay dividends in the years to come.
